Sierra, whose business was founded in 1979, experienced losses beginning in 1983-4 as it shifted to publication of cartridge games and, later, business software, and expanded into mass merchandise distribution channels. Corrective actions, including termination of game cartridge and business software distribution, helped the company return to profitability in 1986-7. Significant subsequent growth stemmed from the introduction of successful new products, among which are sequels, plus versions of previously released software adapted for different computers.

Principal current products have suggested retail prices of $29.95 to $79.95. Sales are made to large computer and software specialty chains, through independent distributors to smaller retailers and, to a limited extent, by means of direct consumer order. Generally, rights are acquired to products created by independent developers, some of whom also are Sierra employees, under license or assignment agreements requiring royalty payments ranging from 5% to 14% of net receipts. R&D expenditures have been increasing consistent with management's policy to increase in-house product development and to reduce future royalty liability.

Next earnings report expected in May.

Total revenues for the nine months to December 31, 1988, climbed 80%, year to year. The company reported that 90% of the revenue increase was attributable to five recently introduced titles: Manhunter, King's Quest IV, Leisure Suit Larry II, Police Quest II and Goldrush! Total costs and expenses rose 77% (despite a 165% increase in research and development outlays, which were boosted in a strategy to increase the number of internally developed products). Pretax income was ahead 88%. Taxes were at a lower effective rate (45.0% versus 52.1%), and income before extraordinary credits advanced 2.2-fold, to $2,711,900 ($0.91 a share), from $1,255,300 ($0.47). The extraordinary credits, from tax-loss carryforwards, totaled $895,400 ($0.30) and $988,000 ($0.37), respectively. Share earnings are based on 2,974,567 common and equivalent shares for the 1988-9 period and 2,670,909 a year earlier.

Historically, Sierra has recorded its highest revenues and earnings in the months immediately preceding the year-end holiday season, which correspond with its third fiscal quarter. Although the company attempts to monitor and control the volume of sales to customers, large shipments in anticipation of the holiday season could lead to customer overstocking and higher-than-normal returns in subsequent months.

During October 1988, in its initial public stock offering, Sierra On-Line sold 1,610,000 common shares, at $9 per share, through underwriters led by Piper, Jaffray & Hopwood Inc. and Oppenheimer & Co., Inc. Of the shares, 980,000 were sold for Sierra's account and 630,000 for stockholders. Net proceeds to the company approximated $7,719,600, and $364,000 was received from the exercise of certain warrants.

Principal purposes of the initial public offering included increasing Sierra's working capital and equity base, facilitating future access to public capital markets and allowing future acquisitions involving publicly traded shares. Management expected that the offering proceeds, plus funds from operations, would be sufficient to meet the company's capital requirements until at least March 31, 1990. Also available to Sierra was an unused $1,500,000 line of credit.
